A summary of wrecks and casualties during the month of April, placed the losses at 32 steamers and 77 sailing vessels.

The proceedings of the twenty-seventh annual meeting of the National Board of Steam Navigation, held in New Orleans, April 4, 1899, are just out from the printers and show an immense amount of work accomplished by this most excellent organization. The report covers 177 closely printed pages and it contains many things of interest to travel writers.

The next annual meeting of the board will be held in New York during the week of the international yacht races.

The steamer M. L. Aubrey, which is coming from Pittsburgh to tow the government dredges this season, ran into the dredgeboat Waver at the "V" at Pittsburgh, Saturday evening, breaking it and its bows loose, and delaying the Virginia for some time.

The Aubrey is a new boat, having been built within the last week or two at Pittsburgh. She has the machinery of the steamer Bennett, which was burned at Pittsburgh some time ago. Her hull was built at Brownsville.

One of the best speeches delivered at the last meeting of the National Board of Steam Navigation was made by Captain O'Brien of New York, and the following comments were made: "I pronounce the railroad the natural ally and leader of steam vessels. I am not versed in statistics, but in a general way would refer to the vast commerce of the metropolis of this Nation, made up by being fed by the railroads of the seaboard, handled by the steam vessel industry. In the harbor of New York alone there are upward of 400 steam vessels engaged in the transfer of railroad freight and passengers. The roads give business to steam vessels, and they in turn retrograde in kind. Competition may exist between the rail and water route, but never so severe and disastrous as between rival vessels, for we can all remember where rates have, by the latter been so severely cut that passengers were carried free, to say nothing of the ocean throw-in, to bring goods to the mill. Let steamboatmen recognize the railroads as their allies and much-needed friends. Let them maintain reasonable rates, reduce their operative expenses by keeping pace with improvements in machinery and engines, foster the National Board of Steam Navigation by increased membership and the race is won."
